POSE TOASTY:

VIVI RAY

A traveler was driving in a remote section of the country and he stopped for a glass of water in front of a weather-beaten shack high in the hills. His curiosity was aroused by the number of children cluttering up the place and he asked the mother: "Are these all your children?"

"Yeah," replied the hill woman. "Sixteen fine children."

"And all by one husband?" asked the amazed motorist.

"No, suh," was the reply. "Six by my first husband, and six by my second husband."

"And what about the other four?"

"Well, mister," smiled the woman, "they's just volunteers!"

"I know we only have one position open but hire the four of them and fire two Vice-Presidents!"

"Homer, when you order a Rump Roast in French, be sure you know how to pronounce it!"

The pretty girl drove him out in the country and being on a nice road stopped the car.

"What's the matter, don't you want to go a little farther?" he asked.

"No, John," she replied, "I've gone far enough. Now it's up to you!"

"How come all you ever want to do is neck?"

"Look, Joe, if you can't stand the heat, keep out of the kitchen... and wait for me in the den!"

"Remember nine years ago, when you looked at my pigtails and skinny legs—and laughed?"

"It wasn't my idea to take your Mother on our honeymoon... and besides, the electric blackout made that room very dark!"

"Don't try it; my dog just loves to bury bones!"

"Honest, Baby, that was a piece of debris... not me!"

A building contractor went to see one of his newly completed houses. Walking into the house where a carpenter was working, he whispered, "Can you hear me through this wall?"

"Yes, but not too well," replied the carpenter.

"Can you see me?"

"No, I can hardly see you," was the carpenter's reply.

"Then that's what I call a good wall," replied the contractor.

"I think this is a rip-off; why don't you ask me to strip, like all the other artists do!"

"Now that's what I call a real gutsy octet!"

A hot-rod owner took his girl for a ride in the country. They went so fast the girl couldn't see anything. Presently, he said: "Ain't it fun? Doesn't it make you glad to be alive?"

"Glad!" gasped the girl. "Glad isn't the word . . . I'm amazed!"

"I misplaced my contact lenses, dear, and I thought I was kissing you ... It felt so wonderful!"

"Of course, my apartment needs painting ... the rent is too high ... It's a bit crowded ... but it's home and I guess I'll sign for another year!"

John: "I spent some of the happiest years of my life on a farm."

Pete: "You were a farmer?"

John: "No, a traveling salesman!"

"Five new wives? When will this darn inflation ever cease!"

CIRCUMCISIONAL EVIDENCE

A married woman in the next apartment who was very helpful this morning is the reason I have a broken nose! A button popped off my fly, and she sewed it back on without taking off my pants. She just finished and was biting off the thread when her husband came in. . . !

BREEZY EYEFUL:
FAY FARRELLI

"Wow! I remember the face but I can't place the body
... and I certainly would love to!"

I got problems. So has everyone else but my problem is a little different. You see my boy friend delights in showing me off in front of all his friends especially in the office. He'll get out in front of everyone and at once they start to play around. They get a little vulgar and before you know they rub my back a little and since I have no control of myself you know what happens next.

Occasionally Mr. Jones stays overtime in the office and we both have ourselves a little fun though his wife keeps calling while we're settling down and getting interested in our work.

The one I really go for is young Peter Smith. He's a real darby—when he holds me close I could faint with sheer delight and his manners are so polite. Well, he's different. Secretly I admire the boss with his real gruff manners because he's a man who gets what he's out for and believe me he's out for everything he can get.

I haven't been feeling too well recently. I've been run down and I know the boys in the office are talking about me behind my back but the girls are really snickering. Recently they brought in a new one in the office and they're all giving her a big play. Once in a while they throw me a glance and I know that they've forgotten me and all the good times they had with me. So here I sit, neglected and alone, just a worn out eraser!

The wife was moody, fitful and nervous. Her husband coaxed her to go see a psychiatrist.

The doctor asked the woman about her unhappiness, studied her answers, then threw his arms around her and gave her an ardent kiss. After that, the woman was gay and sparkling.

"You see?" said the doctor. "That's all your wife needs. I suggest that she receive the same treatment every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday."

"All right, if you say so," the husband agreed. "But there's one hitch—I can bring her in on Tuesdays and Thursdays, but on Saturdays I play golf."

GUNFIGHT AT THE O.K. SUPERMART

Caught the latest adult Western movie the other night. This one's so adult I had to show my grandfather's birth certificate to get past the doorman.

As the picture opens, the Hero and his horse come slowly down the street of this little Western town. You've seen the town a hundred times in movies—the livery stable, the general store, the saloon and dance hall, the supermarket next door to the studio when the screen gets too wide.

The Hero is what they call offbeat. He's 4½ feet tall, bald, and wearing glasses.

You can tell he's a coward as he comes into town. The horse is dragging him.

A bunch of tough-looking hombres come out to meet him, led by the Bad Guy. Even he's been humanized. Instead of hanging around the saloon he lives with his wife and six kids in a tract bungalow.

The tough hombres draw their guns. The Hero looks around for help from his old friends—the blacksmith, the freight agent, the jig borer, the centerless grinder. They all turn away.

Even the check-out clerk at the supermarket checks out. The Hero is alone.

"You can't shoot me," he pleads. "I'm a coward—an adult Western coward."

But they cock their guns, so he has to draw. He draws his handkerchief out of his pocket and wipes the tears off his glasses. This is it.

Quit stalling," they say, so he draws his gun and starts firing.

You know how in an old-fashioned Western the hero fires twenty-seven times from his six-shooter, and twenty-seven guys drop dead. But this is realism. He fires just six times—and twenty-seven guys drop dead.

The Hero gets a flesh wound, of course, which brings the probe-for-the-bullet scene. Usually the Hero's buddy does this, but our boy doesn't have a buddy. So the Bad Guy—the only one who's left—has to drop his gun, run over and probe for the bullet in the Hero's big toe. That's where he got his.

"This may hurt a bit," the Bad Guy says.

The Hero screams, and the Bad Guy says, "Take it easy—I'll have it out in a jiffy." The Hero screams some more, and the Bad Guy says, "Better take a slug of this." He slugs him.

But the Hero is still screaming, so the Bad Guy says, "Shut up—I've almost got it out."

"That's why I'm screaming," says the Hero. "You got it out five minutes ago."

The Bad Guy says "Excuse me," runs back and picks up his gun. But they're both out of bullets, so they throw the guns at each other. Then they throw knives. Then they throw rocks. Then they throw their shoes. Then they tie their socks in knots and throw them—but I mean real big knots.

It looks like a toss-up, when a fellow comes up and gives them each another loaded six-gun. "I'm the studio prop man," he says, "and this picture is running over budget. Get going!"

So then comes the final shooting scene. You know how they always fire together, and the Hero falls to the ground while the Bad Guy still stands smiling. Only it turns out that the Hero just has another flesh wound, and all of a sudden the Bad Guy drops dead from the six bullets in his heart.

Well, this one has a twisteroo. They both fire—and, sure enough, the Hero drops. But the Bad Guy jumps on his horse, rides away, robs a bank, gets captured, and they're going to hang him when they find he's been dead since the shooting.

Meanwhile the Hero is still groveling in the dirt. "Get up—you weren't even hit," they tell him.

"I can't," he says, "I'm looking for my glasses!"

"I admit to peeking over her shoulder, Professor, but it wasn't for looking at her paper!"

"If that's a self-winding watch, it will never keep right time once I start winding up!"

"How do you do it, Mrs. Blotz? I never could get me husband to help me hang out!"

More The Merrier

In the olden days when a fellow asked his girl for a kiss, she was apt to say, "Owing to the scarcity of observers, I think it is perfectly proper that we should allow our selves to float away in the ecstasies of osculation." The girl of to-day says, "Cut out the applesauce and get busy."

NEGOTIABLE NIFTIES

It is not at all unusual for a pretty girl in London to enter a British bank, waltz over to the teller's window, toss a seductive smile, nonchalantly raise her dress and without further fanfare remove her pantys. And it is just as commonplace for the teller without as much as blinking his eyes to accept her silk panties, inspect them casually and hand her a number of bank notes. During all this the beauty is calm, cool and collected.

At about the same time, just across the street in another banking institution, a well-dressed gentleman is being paid off in much the same manner after giving the teller there a hard-boiled egg.

None of this curious routine is the result of an election debt or an April Fools Day joke. In fact according to British law, almost any object, if properly made out, endorsed and carrying a two penny stamp is not only recognized as a valid check but is quickly accepted. The line is only drawn on soft-boiled eggs or other material which is liable to fall apart or disappear after handling.

Used collars, shirts, brassieres, girdles, inside of a pack of cigarettes, brandy bottle labels and handkerchiefs (when properly endorsed) have all been presented as checks, and the tellers paid off.

When he spots a moose at 500 yards, he gives out a light call to the moose, making the animal believe that a female moose is in the neighborhood. Naturally the moose starts towards that call. When the moose gets about 250 yards away, Indian Joe gives out another call—which lets the moose know that the female is desirous of mating. This, of course, whets the appetite of the moose and he starts traveling a little faster. Next, Indian Joe gives out a real passionate call, which literally

"I'll be with you in a minute; I've just finished my Last Will and Testiclement!"

"The Sexual Revolution is here ... and I'm loaded with ammunition!"

"Aw, shucks, Connie; just when I thought you licked the cigarette habit, I catch you with a cigar!"

Over cocktails, the gorgeous, but concetced actress boasted to several extras that a good-looking fellow stayed up all night trying to batter down the door of her apartment

What an awful experience' exclaimed one of the girls "Didn't he offer any protests?"

"Protests?" echoed the actress "Protests against what?"

"Against you keeping him locked in when he wanted out," said the girl

he told me he saved up to twenty-five years, and I thought he was talking about money!"

"Oh, Jimmy! I think this stone bench is beginning to affect you: you're becoming marble-ized!"

"You owe me twenty bucks; I told you she'd drop anything she was doing and come over whenever I called!"

"The ring is on his finger, Mr. Boyer; you can snap him out of it now!"

"Pollution and Energy go hand in hand," notes Sandy Seager, but to keep things straight, I'm all for Adam Power!"

"It's a new auto hood ornament according to the rules of the Department of Transportation!"

"I'll bet you won't find crabgrass on her lawn!"

WGA

"Don't be selfish, Roger; you can spare one of your suits for this poor but worthy stranger!"
